

A detailed botanical illustration of the grass Avena sesquiteria. The drawing shows two slender, upright stems that cross each other near the base. Each stem is topped with a dense, elongated spike of small, light-colored flowers. At the base of the stems, there are several long, narrow, green leaves. A small, brown, fibrous root system is visible at the bottom left. The entire illustration is rendered in a delicate, hand-drawn style with fine lines and light color washes.
